Places that change lives

A

When Lucy Hopkins took a gap year before going to university, she could never have imagined how life-changing it would be. She decided to go travelling with a few friends. After hours of research on the internet, they finally bought round-the-world tickets and started their adventure in Australia. First stop: Ayers Rock (in the Uluru-Kata Tjuta National Park, Northern Territory) and a five-day camping trip, exploring the gigantic sandstone monoliths of the area. But it wasn't the natural wonders that captured Lucy's imagination – it was the history of the Aboriginal people who had lived there long before European settlers arrived. She decided to stay on after her friends left. She wanted to find work at the resort so she could learn more about the Dreamtime, the myths and legends of these extraordinary people. Much to her parents' concern, she has given up her college place and will reapply next year for a course in anthropology.

B

'It's never too late to follow your dreams.' So said fifty-year-old yachtsman, Daniel Laws, when we caught up with him recently. He'd just returned from a six-month trip sailing around the Caribbean and was looking forward to some creature comforts in his own home. When asked what had made him give up his job to take to the seas, he said that he'd fallen in love with the Indonesian island of Bali. He'd stepped off the plane one October afternoon, straight into a wall of steaming, tropical heat. One hair-raising taxi ride later, he found himself in a beachside 'bed and breakfast' looking out over seas of the deepest blue. He was hooked. From that moment on, he spent all his time either in or on the water and he promised himself that he would return when he had his own boat.

C

He is now a city guide, taking round groups of foreign tourists, and it is thanks to this passion that he met Emma, an English journalist who was on holiday in Prague.
