Lecture content

Judicial comparative studies is a legal science, a field and a direction of interdisciplinary legal research that focuses on general and specific patterns of emergence, functioning and development of national legal systems, their typology, and current processes of legal development of the legal map of the world. Legal comparativistics is a fairly young discipline. Its emergence is a natural result of globalization processes taking place in the modern world. Legal comparative studies has its own subject matter. It is the specificity of the subject matter that determines the place of legal comparative studies in the system of legal disciplines. Comparison as such took place even in pre-state society. However, an important stage in the genesis of legal comparative studies is the publication of comparative journals (Germany - in 1829, France - in 1834) and the establishment of comparative law departments: - in 1831 at the Collège de France; - in 1846 at the University of Paris. As a separate academic discipline, legal comparative studies emerged in the second half of the twentieth century. Today, the conceptual apparatus of legal comparative studies is still being formed and the subject matter is being specified.

Minute № 9 from 28 . 08 .20 23

Module Control Work № 1
 on subject "JUDICIAL COMPARATIVE STUDIES"

Variant 1

1. The first question of the ICR is a comparative study. The student chooses a rule of law, a branch of law, and an institution of law. The field of choice is not limited. The object of the research should be any two legal families or legal systems of the present day. Be sure to note the factors of modification in the convergence of legal families and indicate your own conclusions.

2. Describe the structure of law in the states of the common law family.

3. Outline the features of the Romano-Germanic legal family.
